Now I see things a bit clearer. I've been so close to being trafficked without even knowing what was going on. Thanks a lot.

I'm going to be more careful online, at school and with dating. Especially since older men make me feel 'special.' So thank you.

First responders trained to identify and rescue victims. In 2015, we received dozens of calls from first responders who identified victims in their jobs after having been through our training.

EMPOWERMENT

Survivors served with trauma-informed case management, mentoring, restorative aftercare services, and/or referrals. One such case includes an 17-year old survivor who was identified through a first responder training we hosted. We helped her get placed into a restorative safe home and mentored her weekly. Through our team's ongoing relationship, she shared vital information that assisted law enforcement in opening an investigation of the crime ring that trafficked her.

“

Thank you. I have learned that pimp life is not normal but it's hard to get away, especially when you think you're in love. I now know I need help.

You have helped me realize that I'm worth more than any price and the past doesn't define me. I'm glad I was saved.

A journey forward...

As we look back on our impact in 2015, we can't help but see it in the broader scope of a journey. A journey to freedom. We are committed to the journey each survivor of sex trafficking embarks upon as they seek to find restoration. Each journey is unique. It's a commitment to the long haul. Will you join us in this journey?
